Feasibility Study

Feasibility study of the system is very important stage during system Analysis. Feasibility study is a test of proposed system according to its workability impact on the organization, ability to meet user needs, and effective use of resources. Feasibility study decides whether the system is properly developed or not. Feasibility study mainly focuses on whether the system is feasible or not. It concentrates on various kinds of feasibility such as,

1. Technical Feasibility
2. Operational Feasibility

- Technical Feasibility :-

Technical feasibility determines whether the technology needed for the proposed system is available and how it can be integrated within the organization. Technical evaluation must also assess whether the organization has the expertise to use it.

The technical feasibility in the proposed system deals with the technology used in the system. It deals with the hardware and software used in the system whether they are of latest technology or not. It happens that after a system is prepared a new technology arises and the user wants the system based on that technology. Thus it is important to check the system to be technically feasible.

The memory requirement is 4 GB RAM to have better performance. As far as software is concerned, MySQL 5.0+, XAMPP and APACHE should be installed on the server.

• Operational Feasibility

Operational feasibility measures how well the solution will work in the organization and how end user and management will feel about the system. It will allow users to query them to get the appropriate and adequate information.

- On studying the operational feasibility of the project, the following conclusion could be derived.
- There is enough and more support and motivation from the management.
- The proposed system will in no way produce wrong results, it will all together won't produce outputs and will not produce error some outputs.
- Due to its easy functionality for operators who are not from IT background can easily use the application.

Thus, it is operationally feasible to develop the proposed system.
